Photo: Michelle WooThis summer, I've been looking for a children's project that has some mileage in it — things that can be worked on for days or weeks. I landed on an easy activity, needed some supplies and made me feel like a witch: I blew up the coloring pages. Specifically, I uploaded a coloring page file on the Staples.com and enlarged it as a 3-by-4-foot engineering printout. It is a large black-and-white mold usually used for engineering or architectural plans. For about $7, we now have a mural on our wall, ready to be colored by my 6-year-old daughter, or anyone who feels like picking up some crayons. The coloring page I chose was designed by PicCandle on Etsy. I want a print that has a good amount of detail, but not a Waldo level. Last night, the kid started working on it, and then I jumped at one point, too. Coloring is really relaxing. To create your own large coloring page, here's what to do:Choose a high-resolution coloring page. There are many free or cheap PDF downloads online. If you have very young children, you may choose simple illustrations, but for older children with more patience, you can look to mandalas or other designs of adult coloring books. Create a mold of your technique. Staples, FedEx, and Parabo allow you to upload your designs on their sites for printing. You can resize your own prints with Preview or resize images online, or use the option to fit content to printer paper, if you have one. It's okay if there's some white space along the border. Record your large coloring page on the wall or place it on a table or floor, and then let your child do it. It's a fun activity to play dates and parties, too. In the end, you have a giant piece of art.
